

WORKSHOP

OPEN south east ASIA

19.-20. May '17

FIW - BONN

The Open Southeast Asia workshop serves as a catalyst for students, professionals (from Governmental Organizations as well as from NGOs) and academics — empowering them with general knowledge about open data, but also providing examples of how open data is practically applied in Southeast Asia and Germany.

Moreover, we would like to raise the question how civil society can actually participate and benefit from it. We are aiming to bring people from different fields together to present their topics and share their ideas.

DATA

Data is not equal information, information is not equal knowledge. Data though serves as basis for information and knowledge. But how to read, understand and interpret data?

NETWORKS

Social networks are a platform for the rapid spread of ideas. But how do they develop and how these ideas can be transported and transformed to positively affect policy decision-making?

CIVIL SOCIETY

How open data can engage civil society? The workshop will focus on the role that access to open data can play in enhancing democracy, participation and transparency.
