a redefined icon in the heart of Miami Beach...

The Yester-Years of Cardozo...

Built in 1939, the Cardozo Hotel was named after Benjamin Cardozo, one of the first Jewish jurors appointed to the US Supreme Court. Cardozo is part of the Art Deco District, recognized by the National Register of Historic Places.

Since its opening, Cardozo Hotel has played a prominent role in a variety of feature films including A Hole In The Head (1959), The Birdcage (1996), Something About Mary (1998) and Marley and Me (2008).

As a child, owner Gloria Estefan was sitting on a bench with her Grandfather, pointed across the street at the Cardozo Hotel and said, 'I am going to buy that hotel one day.'

Today, her dream is a reality as she now owns Cardozo with her husband, Emilio. In 2019, they unveiled Cardozo South Beach as a refined and contemporary luxury boutique hotel, while still maintaining the essence of the hotel she fell in love with as a child.

History. Redefined.

A row of blue and white striped beach umbrellas is set up on a sandy beach. The umbrellas are arranged in a line, receding into the background. The foreground umbrella is in sharp focus, showing the intricate details of its canopy and the central hub. The stripes are a vibrant blue and a clean white. The background is slightly blurred, emphasizing the umbrellas in the foreground.

Beach Services

Explore the Atlantic with a variety of watersport rentals including jet skis, kayaks, stand-up paddleboards, snorkeling equipment, and much more. Additionally, enjoy complimentary beach loungers as a hotel guest.

A photograph of an outdoor courtyard at night. The space is illuminated by numerous warm white string lights strung across the ceiling. In the foreground, there are several wooden chairs and a large beige patio umbrella. In the background, there are more plants, a staircase with a metal railing, and a building with a sign that says "ARDOZO".
